About the Organizer	Agricultural Management Institute of Ministry of Agriculture (AMI) of China is a professional official training institution directly affiliated to the Ministry of Agriculture. It undertakes training to officials in China agricultural system and conducts exchange programs on international agricultural human resources development. Since 2004, the institute has successfully hold seminars and training courses for developing countries in which thousands of agricultural officials have participated. Due to scientific program design, regulated management and hospitable reception, the institute has received applause from all participants. In order to make our participants more feel like home, the institute has fully furnished hotels, well equipped teaching rooms and divers dining halls. Wi-Fi is available in living rooms and training areas with free access to Internet.
Seminar Content	The seminar will be developed with lectures, discussions and field visits. The Chinese government officials and experts will present relevant policies and measures on China's agricultural development, especially share experience in enhancing circular agriculture. Participants are invited to make a country report to share information and discuss common concerns. A free talk will be hold to exchange ideas on agricultural cooperation between China and other participating ountries. The seminar will also arrange field visits on agricultural and rural development to Tianjing municipality and Chengdu city of Sichuan province.
